

MENTAL TESTS AT STEPHENS SHOW ABILITY

Ambition, Attention and Concentration not Measured—182 Questions in Half Hour.

GIVEN IN MANY SCHOOLS

Two Answers Say Patrick Henry is Irishman and John
McCormack a Famous Lecturer.

Dean J. J. Oppenheimer of Stephens College learned among other things that Conklin was not the name of a fountain pen but of an airplane, from answers given by students taking the intelligence test. This test, which is of a psychological nature, was prepared by Dr. L. L. Thurstone of the Carnegie Institute of Technology to determine the natural mental capacity of students.

Mr. Oppenheimer gave the test, which consisted of 182 questions to be answered in thirty minutes. Many of the exercises were statements with the requirement to answer whether they were true or false.

"We found out many interesting and surprising things from these tests," said Mr. Oppenheimer. "We discovered that Patrick Henry was an Irishman and that John McCormack is a famous lecturer."

"Many persons don't understand mental tests," said Mr. Oppenheimer. "The result shows the mental ability of a student, but does not measure ambition, attention or concentration."

A mental test was offered to Stephens College students last spring. There was a fairly high correlation between the rating of mental tests given them and scholastic standing, in Mr. Oppenheimer's opinion.

MAINTAIN FOR ADVISERS
"We don't determine the entrance to college on conditions of a girl's standing in these examinations," he went on. "They are mainly for the benefit of the advisers and teachers in understanding the girl's ability."

This intelligence test has been given during the last school year to 27,251 students in 154 colleges and normal schools. It included 9,500 engineering freshmen in forty-eight engineering colleges in which the tests were given under the auspices of the Society of Engineering Education. The freshmen of the School of Engineering at the University were among those who took it last year. The results received ran about the same as at other universities, showing, according to Mr. Oppenheimer, that freshmen all over the country have about the same average mentality.

Columbia University at New York makes an entrance requirement the passing of these mental tests. The classes there, too, are organized largely on the basis of mental rating. The University of Iowa also uses these tests to a large extent. Two weeks ago entrance tests were given there to over 1,400 freshmen. The dean of Arts and Science at that school has an assistant psychologist in his department, who diagnoses all failures and students doing a low grade of work. He finds out how they do their work and what changes could be made to improve their methods of study.

ARBITRATION IS NOT ADEQUATE

M. W. Watkins Says Arbitration Cannot Settle Controversies.

"Arbitration does not offer a basis of settlement of controversies between employer and employee, which will be acceptable as a just decision upon principle to the parties concerned."

This is the way Prof. Myron W. Watkins summed up the question of "State Arbitration of Industrial Disputes" at the last regular meeting of the Constructive Christian Democracy Club in the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium.

Professor Watkins explained that compulsory arbitration assumes a fundamental harmony of interests between employer and employee which does not exist. State arbitration could not succeed because it would put society in a vice, he said; and it would not allow for the flexibility of competitive organization.

Professor Watkins told of the frequent periodical upheavals in industrial life today, and said that no means of avoiding them are yet been found. He believes the development of some means of control of these industrial disputes is a vital problem, and also expressed a belief that means of control would be worked out in time.

In referring to the Esch-Cummings Act as a means of settling railroad disputes, Mr. Watkins said that no chance for a trial of the bill had occurred.

He used Canada as an example of the failure of compulsory arbitration. Two hundred and twenty-two strikes occurred here in ten years of operation of the arbitration law.

Professor Watkins said little of the industrial courts set up in Kansas in 1919. He explained, however, that it was an intention of that state to establish arbitration in most industrial disputes there.

Although his address disfavored arbitration generally, Mr. Watkins added: "This is not to say that the machinery of arbitration is useless, and that there is no way in which the public can act to protect itself by minimizing the likelihood of controversies developing into industrial warfare."

"The provision of mediation and conciliation facilities has everywhere been found a great help in bringing about amicable settlements. Direct negotiation has cleared up many controversies that in its absence might have developed through prejudice and ignorance into bitter industrial conflicts."

Student Says Women's Moral Standards Are Lax In Orient

To illustrate his argument that women are fundamentally on the same moral level with men and that their finer sensibilities and so called "pedestal position" are nothing more than surface polish and delusion, Dundas Ross, a University student, described the conditions as he found them among the American and European women now living in China.

"In the Orient," he explained, "we find the white women unhampered by public opinion. There are no restrictions as far as social conditions are concerned. Women are allowed to do as they please and as a result there is marked laxity in the general moral attitude of these women."

The American and European women in the Orient are from the best classes and highest type of American and European families, according to Mr. Ross. Released from the bonds of rigid social standards and the fear of public censure they invariably fall to a lower level.

"With general criticism entirely absent, it is seldom that we see women who do not habitually smoke and drink in public," he says. "The superficiality of the women is perhaps due in part to an over-supply of leisure time." Their many servants relieve them from numerous household responsibilities.

There is a strict line drawn between the Chinese and the white people living in China. The races are segregated, each living in a separate part of the town or city. The most important business districts, however, are located in the Chinese and Japanese concessions. The white people are held in great respect by the Chinese and Japanese, especially in the cities of Tien Tsin, Hongkong and Peking, where most of the foreigners reside.

"The Chinese, who are considered the best of the races in the Orient, have the highest respect for the Chinese women who are held by custom to very rigid social standards."

BUREAU GAINS IN 4 COUNTIES

Farm Bureau Federation Increases Membership in Organized Drive.
Monroe County expects to increase the membership of its Farm Bureau from 400 to 1,000 members through a campaign which is being carried on in the county. Paul B. Naylor of the College of Agriculture and two representatives of the Missouri Farm Bureau Federation are holding a series of twenty-four meetings through the county this week. This speaking campaign will be followed by a farm-to-farm canvass made by fifteen representatives of the federation next week. A similar campaign will be conducted in Perry County, beginning next Monday.

Through the co-operation of the federation, Buchanan County is organizing five co-operative elevators, the organization of the first one being completed last Saturday. Three representatives of the bureau are at work in the county this week and a fourth is working on a similar proposition in Clinton County.
